Sepsis a Condition Resulting from an Untreated Infection

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Our study continues to focus on respiratory conditions resulting from ineffective treatments. Sepsis is the body's life-threatening response to infection. It is a medical emergency requiring rapid diagnosis and treatments. Sepsis or septic shock can result from a respiratory infection, such as pneumonia or influenza ( flu ).

REMEMBER: if you have a cold or flu and breathing becomes more difficult with uncontrolled high temperature. Call your doctor and 911 immediately, go to the nearest hospital for emergency care. According to the CDC when germs get into a person's body, they can cause an infection. If you don't stop that infection, sepsis will occur. The most sites of infection that leads to sepsis are the lungs, urinary tract and the gastrointestinal tract.

There are three stages of sepsis: the initial recognition of sepsis, severe sepsis and septic shock. When your immune system goes into overdrive in response to an infection, sepsis will appear due to the body's inability to eliminate the infection. When treatments or medical interventions are missing, sepsis is the leading cause of death, more significant than breast cancer, lung cancer or heart attack. Research reveals sepsis can kill an infected person within 12 hours. Many who do survive are left with life changing effects such as post - traumatic stress disorder, chronic pain and fatigue and organs dysfunction.

Because you feel miserable when you have a flu infection, you can rest assured that it is the results of your body fighting hard. It's combating the spread of the virus in your body and killing infected cells. Researchers revealed the impact of the flu infection on muscles is another unintended consequence of the immune response to the virus.
