Multiple Sclerosis : Neurological Disease

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

The human body was wonderfully made by God. All the necessary organs, blood vessels, bones and nerve cells were specially designed to provide normal body functions for activities of daily living. Keep in mind some people were born with birth defects and our normal bodies can be self-destructive. Today we will focus our study on the most common form of a neurological disease ----- Multiple Sclerosis. An unpredictable disease affecting the Central Nervous System, disrupting the flow of information within the brain and between the brain and body.

The brain and the spinal cord are the main parts of the Central Nervous System. The brain is the control center for all maintenance of the entire body. If a specific problem occurring within the body, a nerve message is sent to the brain. Immediately the brain sends a reaction message to the affected area. Example: awareness – pain in right leg, take or do something to relieve the pain. The spinal cord is a relay station, carrying messages back and forth between the brain and nerves that runs throughout the body. Research studies reveal our fastest nerve impulses can travel 275 MPH; nerve impulses slow down as we age.

The exact cause of Multiple Sclerosis (MS) is unknown. However, something triggers the immune system to attack the Central Nervous System, damaging the myelin – the sheath that covers the transmission nerves. The function of the myelin is to protect and enhance the transmission of impulses. If the myelin is damage, the transmission of these impulses is slowed down, in a person with MS. This interferes with signals to and from the brain. This interruption of communication signals causes unpredictable symptoms such as numbness, tingling, mood changes, memory problems, pain, fatigue, blindness, inability to taste / smell food and / or paralysis. Everyone's experience with MS is different and these losses may be temporary or long lasting.
