"Education with A Purpose" Part-6

The University of California at Berkeley, a school known for its student activism, rebellion against America's Christian heritage, and "hippie" counterculture in the 1960s, has a Bible-inspired motto, "Let There Be Light," taken from Genesis 1:3.

American education has strayed far from its moorings. We have shifted from a nation that saw its very survival as dependent on the spread of Christian principles through the schools, to a nation that literally disdains, repudiates, and has ejected the teaching of Christian principles from the public school system. The Founders would be appalled. Physician and signer of the Declaration of Independence, Dr. Benjamin Rush, asserted: "The only foundation for a useful education in a republic is to be laid in religion. Without this there can be no virtue, and without virtue there can be no liberty, and liberty is the object and life of all republican governments".

Noah Webster echoed those sentiments: "In my view, the Christian religion is the most important and one of the first things in which all children, under a free government, ought to be instructed" (1843). The words of God to Moses at Mt. Sinai ought to serve as the guiding star for America's schools: "Gather the people to Me, and I will let them hear My words, that they may learn to fear Me all the days they live on the earth, and that they may teach their children" (Deuteronomy 4:10). "Come, you children, listen to me; I will teach you the fear of the Lord" (Psalms 34:11). Without the fear of the Lord instilled in the nation's youth, all will be lost (Deuteronomy 5:33; 6:1-18; Jeremiah 7:23).

Prayer Request

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. James 5:16

HealthCare Ministry- Coronavirus "Avoid Catching COVID-19" Part-2

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

"A little fresh air can do your body good, and we think there's evidence it can do your building good as well," said Kevin Van Den Wymelenberg, a co-author of the guide and a professor at the School of Architecture and Environment at the University of Oregon. "It's a simple strategy that we have access to in most buildings and homes." Recent research shows that high temperature and high relative humidity may reduce the transmission of COVID-19. Boosting the percentage of water molecules in the air can help in a few ways, according to the guide's authors. Those water molecules may damage the outer membrane of the virus, making it viable for a shorter amount of time. They also make the tiny droplets that viruses live in heavier, which causes them to fall out of the air more quickly. The humidity also affects how well your body can defend itself against pathogens and other particles, including viruses. A coronavirus gets into the body through mucous membranes, like your eyes, nose, and mouth. Indoor air tends to dry out those membranes, making your body more vulnerable to pathogens. Keeping the humidity a little bit higher allows your body's first line of defense to work at its optimum level. Letting sunlight stream into your home is another way to put some pressure on viruses that have made their way inside. UV light damages most microorganisms and viruses, including coronaviruses closely related to SARS-CoV-2. "We have evidence in the literature that sunlight can inactivate influenza viruses and other viruses," said Mark Fretz, another of the guide's co-authors and a research assistant professor at the University of Oregon's College of Design. "It's also good for your psychological well-being." This includes disinfecting your phone, carefully washing your clothes, and cleaning your reusable grocery bags. We're all having to make really big changes to slow the spread of COVID-19. These recommendations are no replacement for hand washing and social distancing, but they might still make a small difference. With so much uncertainty surrounding the pandemic, having even a little more control might get us through this a little bit easier.
