Urinary Tract Infection : UTI

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Urinary tract infections occur when bacteria enter the urinary tract through the urethra. A tube that carries urine from the bladder to the genital areas. The urinary system is designed to keep out bacteria. But the defenses sometimes fail. When this happens, bacteria may take hold and grow into a full-blown infection in the urinary tract. Most UTIs are caused by bacteria, but some are caused by fungi and in rare cases, by viruses. UTIs are among the most common infections in humans. Escherichia coli (E. coli) is a type of bacteria found in the gastrointestinal (GI) tract. The food we eat is digested and separated in the GI tract. The liquid nutrients are transferred into the blood system for maintenance of daily healthy body systems. The solid portion of the food eaten, is transferred into waste material (stool) and is eliminated from the body carrying the bacteria E. coli.

DID YOU KNOW, UTIs are more common in women? They are 30 times more likely than men to get UTIs. Because they have a shorter urethra than men, with less distance for bacteria to travel upward, to reach the bladder. Also, all three openings are close to each other the anus, urethra and the vagina. This is due to the female anatomy. Many women experience more than one UTI during their lifetime. Preventive measures to help lower the risk of UTIs. 1) Drink plenty of liquids, especially water helping to dilute the urine. This leads to urinating more often, allowing bacteria to be flushed from the urinary tract, before an infection can begin. 2) It is a good practice to wipe from the front to back, not the back to the front, because of the bacteria in the bowel movements. This is the main way, bacteria is transferred into the urinary tract system ---poor hygiene.
