Tinnitus

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Tinnitus is hearing a sound without external sources. The sounds are created within the head, such as ringing, buzzing, hissing and swooshing. Nearly everyone has experience tinnitus at one point in their life, probably not lasting more than several seconds. The ears are organs located on both sides of the head, responsible for hearing and balance. Sound waves are picked up by the ears and sent to the brain where they are processed, into a sound we recognize but don't understand. Normally the brain is expecting to get a certain amount of stimulation from your ears. If it is not effectively received, the brain will create a phantom sound – tinnitus. Because the brain is reacting to sound signals that are missing, due to exposure of excessive loud noises from concerts and explosions. Unfortunately, loud noises will gradually cause harmful damage to the ears. Tinnitus is an early sign of hearing loss.

Other causes include ear wax blocking the ear canal, side effect of certain medications, middle ear infection, abnormal bone growth in the middle ear, older adults, brain disease or a vascular disorder of the head and neck area. Statistics: 50 million Americans have experienced some form of tinnitus. Roughly 20 million people struggles daily with chronic tinnitus. Approximately 2 million people, have extreme and debilitating cases. Researchers reported the virus that cause COVID – 19, infected the inner ear. REMEMBER – notify your doctor immediately, if tinnitus continues inferring with your ability to hear correctly. A medical examination will determine the correct treatment. There is no cure for tinnitus. Once again, we have discovered another symptom of a disease without a cure. It can be controlled with treatments. Ear wax can be removed, allowing freedom for sounds to travel to the brain for correct processing. Hearing aids can treat both hearing loss and mask the unwanted sounds
