Depression VS Grieving

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Depression is a common mental health condition that causes a persistent feeling of sadness and changes in how you think, sleep, eat and act. It can affect all aspects of life, including relationships with family, friends and community. It can result from or lead to problems at school and at work. GOOD NEWS, DEPRESSION IS TREATABLE. It is the most treatable of all mental disorders. Between 80% and 90% of people with depression respond well to medical treatment. Without treatment, depression can get worse and last longer. In severe cases, it can lead to self-harm or death by suicide. Women are more likely than men to experience depression. Some studies show that one-third of all women will experience a major depressive episode, in their lifetime. Depression can affect anyone, even a person who appears to live in an ideal circumstance.

Grief can cause depression resulting from loss of a loved one, loss of a job or the ending of a relationship are difficult experiences, for a person to endure. It is a normal feeling of sadness or grief to develop in response to such situations. But being sad is not the same as having depression. The grieving process is natural and unique to each individual and shares some of the same features of depression. However, both grief and depression may involve intense sadness and withdrawal from usual activities. They are different in very important ways: grief is a painful mental feeling that comes in waves, often mixed with positive memories of the deceased. Depression relates to a negative effect lasting a longer period of time. Another difference, self-esteem is usually maintained during grieving. In major depression, feelings of worthlessness and poor self-esteem are common. GOOD TO KNOW, grief and depression can co-exist, for some people. The death of a loved one, losing a job or being a victim of a physical assault or a major disaster can lead to depression. HERE IS THE KEY FOR UNDERSTANDING CO-EXISTING: When grief and depression co-exist, the grief is more severe and lasts longer, than grief without depression. Remember, you are functioning on a normal level, but you refuse to accept the loss of your loved one by holding onto memories.
