Bipolar Disorder in Children and Teens

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Bipolar disorder is a mental illness that cause people to experience extreme, changes in mood and behavior. Bipolar disorder is not the same as the typical ups and downs every child goes through. This illness affects changes in sleep, energy level and the ability to think clearly. However, children with bipolar disorder experience severe mood changes, such as a feeling of intense excitement, a tendency to be easily made angry, that are different from their normal mood. Bipolar disorder usually happens in episodes but the illness itself lasts a lifetime. It can be managed with treatments. It is difficult to diagnose bipolar disorder in children because there are differences in diagnostic criteria. Risk factors, such as symptoms that overlap with other psychiatric disorders, the child's correct age, intellectual capabilities and environmental factors, help determine diagnoses.

Signs and Symptoms: Each child may experience symptoms of bipolar disorder differently. However, these symptoms are associated with either manic bipolar or depressive bipolar. But there are cases where a child may experience a mixed episode of both manic and depressive bipolar symptoms. These mood changes can cause symptoms to last for several days to weeks.

Manic Symptoms: increase energy level that is unusual for a child; increase disorganized thinking; easily angered and not appropriate for the situation; increase self-esteem, thinking you are better than others; increase involvement in high-risk activities; poor judgment with delusional beliefs or bizarre behaviors and suicidal thoughts or attempts. Depressive symptoms: Feeling hopeless or helpless; low self-esteem; excessive guilt; difficulty with relationship; sleeping too much or too little; decreased energy; difficulty concentrating or a decline in school performance; unable to make correct decisions; frequent physical complaints such as headache/stomachache/feeling tired; thoughts of wishing to be dead and suicidal thoughts or attempts.
