"In Search of Wisdom" (Part 11)

From the Minister's Desk

This causes you to miss out on two very important tools that God wants to use in guiding you, the first being objectivity. You're not objective about yourself, much less your life. Neither am I. I'm surrounded by my emotions, my circumstances, my biases, and my desires. I need to go to people who can see things independently of all that. But that's not all I get through counsel. I also get wisdom. When I go to someone else, I get his or her experiences, maturity, and knowledge concerning what I'm trying to decide.

This isn't about running your life by committee, or taking what somebody says and feeling as if you have to follow it. It certainly shouldn't be used as a shortcut to the hard work of studying the Bible for God's moral will, or investing in prayer, evaluating circumstances, and using your common sense. But going to someone who is intimate with God, intimate with you, and able to tell you what you may not want to hear, is invaluable.

Here is the critical principle of wisdom: The person who refuses to act on what he or she knows, who refuses wise counsel, who ignores sage advice, will get in trouble. In the resulting despair that good information will haunt that person; the fact that he or she knew what wisdom advised will become a cruel joke. While this passage says that wisdom will laugh and taunt, all the noise will come from inside this person's own head. When he or she searches for some intelligent way out of the pit he or she has so foolishly dug, there will be no wisdom left.

“Strokes, heart attacks, sudden deaths: Does America understand the long-term risks of catching COVID?”

Submitted by: Beatrice Ramsey

Arizona Cardinals defensive end J.J. Watt recently disclosed that he had an episode of atrial fibrillation. While the condition can be caused by a number of reasons, Watt was diagnosed with COVID in the weeks leading up to his health crisis.

A 35-year-old acquaintance drops dead from a hemorrhagic stroke. A friend in her 40s, and another in his 70s, experience recurrent spells of extreme dizziness, their hearts pounding in their chests when they stand. A 21-year-old student with no prior medical history is admitted to the ICU with heart failure, while a 48-year-old avid tennis player, previously healthy, suddenly suffers a heart attack. A relative is diagnosed with pericarditis, an inflammation of the protective sac surrounding the heart.

I can't confirm the exact etiology of all these cases. But every one of the people I mentioned had a history of COVID either days or months beforehand—and all of them experienced only mild cases of infection at the time.

Is it possible, despite everything we know, that we still underestimate COVID's reach and danger? It is not normal for me to know so many people with severe conditions. Not normal at all.

Lengthy social media threads have begun compiling lists of people much like those mentioned above, and while there are many possible causes for their health misfortunes, the sheer volume of cases speaks to something more worrisome than just a Twitter phenomenon.

A large international study involving 136 research institutions in 32 countries has documented an increased incidence of ischemic strokes in young patients compared to pre-pandemic levels. More than a third were under the age of 55, and many lacked typical risk factors such as smoking, diabetes, and high blood pressure.

Confess your faults one to another, and pray one for another, that ye may be healed. The effectual fervent prayer of a righteous man availeth much. James 5:16
