Personality Disorder: Bipolar Disorder – Part 2

Bipolar disorder is a mental illness that causes dramatic shifts in a person's mood, energy and ability to think clearly. People with bipolar experience high and low moods, known as mania and depression. This behavior differs from the typical ups and downs, most people experience. Bipolar is a lifelong mental condition, that can be managed with medication and psychotherapy. However, some people with bipolar may find an elevated mood of mania appealing, especially if it occurs after depression. The "high" mood does not stop at a comfortable or controllable level. Moods are rapidly becoming more irritable, unpredictable making reckless decisions and taking unusual risks. Most of the time, people in a manic mood are unaware of the negative consequences of their actions. A person with bipolar disorder can be suicidal, no matter what mood they are experiencing.

The lows of bipolar disorder causes people to experience depressive moods and have problems falling asleep and remaining asleep. When people are depressed, minor decisions – such as what to eat can be overwhelming. They become obsessed with feelings of personal failure, guilt or helplessness. Part 3 will be information on Schizophrenia.
