How To Improve Blood Circulation

Proper daily blood circulation is the key for maintaining good health. It ensures that blood and oxygen continuously flow throughout the body, allowing every organ to function properly. It helps to heal wounds faster, it keeps your brain sharp and your heart healthy. Circulation can also affect the immune system, from white blood cells carried by the bloodstream, helping to fight infection. However there are things that interfere with good blood circulation such as: narrowed arteries causing reduce blood flow, obesity, anemia, blood clots, uncontrolled diabetes, smoking and high blood pressure.

Things to do to improve blood circulation: exercise will help boost circulation also stretching before and after exercising. Stop smoking – it will inhibit blood flow, destroy blood vessel walls and cause plaque to accumulate in the veins. If you are anemic, talk to your doctor to see if an iron supplement or iron rich diet is the best treatment for you. While sitting, elevating your legs will help move blood to the upper part of your body. Compression socks put pressure on your feet to help blood vessels, push blood up to your heart, to continue a good circulating pattern.
