Understanding Lupus

Lupus is a chronic (on going) autoimmune disorder that occurs when the body's own defense immune system, attacks the body by mistake. In this case, the cells of the immune system that produce antibodies, called B cells attack healthy tissues. This leads to inflammation and damage to multiple organs, including the skin, joints, kidneys, heart and lungs. Remember, there is no cure for lupus and the medication taken over a long period of time, can cause additional side effects. The exact cause of lupus is unknown. However, researchers believed it is a combination of genetics, increased levels of estrogen hormone and environmental factors. Lupus is more likely to affect women ages 15 – 44, because estrogen levels are higher before periods and during pregnancy.

GOOD TO KNOW: lupus is not contagious, you can't "catch" lupus or give it to someone else. Symptoms includes: fatigue(tiredness), joint pains, skin rash, fever, hair loss, mouth sores, difficult breathing and memory loss. However, there is an investigation clinical trial, involving blood filtering through a machine to modify T cells that produce / make B cells for normal immune system. This way the modified T cells can recognize, attack and destroy the "bad" B cells that engage in autoimmune disease. Once this occur the healthy B cells will repopulate providing a normal immune system.
