The Difference Between Alzheimer's And Dementia

Alzheimer's disease is a brain disorder, that slowly destroys memory, thinking, reasoning, speaking, daily behavior and functional abilities. Alzheimer's disease is not a normal part of aging. It is the result of complex changes in the brain that started years, before symptoms appeared and lead to the loss of brain cells and their communications with one another. Protein plaques in the brain interfere with brain cells communication, causing brain cellular death and over a period of time brain shrinkage. Brain fibers is responsible for cell transporting nutrients to other cells for normal maintenance. When tangles of brain fibers occurs, this causes damage to brain cells because of no nutrients. After these two major problems, symptoms will occur.

Remember: Alzheimer's disease is a progressive disease, where dementia symptoms gradually worsen and currently there is no cure. But there are medications that can help manage symptoms and slow the progression of the disease. GOOD TO KNOW: dementia is not a disease, but a group of symptoms caused by Alzheimer's disease, that's why Alzheimer's is sometimes referred to as dementia. There are other brain disorders that can cause dementia symptoms. Memory problems are often one of the first symptom of Alzheimer's disease, but this can vary from person to person. When this occur notify your doctor for professional help.
