Pain Management

Pain Management Pain management refers to several medical methods used to control pain. These methods provide the highest expectation, improving a person's quality of life. Each method requires a plan of care, depending on severity and type of pain. Everyone at some point in their life has experienced pain in some form, such as a headache or stomped toe. There are many different types of pain and many different ways to treat them. To manage pain, first you must accurately describe location, frequency and severity. Acute pain doesn't last long, but it is often severe.

This type of pain is often intense and sudden, caused by a specific injury, illness or surgery. It is a temporary pain that usually go away once the cause is healed. It is treated with medication, rest or surgery. Chronic pain last a longer amount of time or constantly recurring and can range from mild to severe. Pain medication is used more frequently, physical therapy helps control pain with heat/cold and exercise treatments. Also, electrical stimulation of muscles or nerves that is blocking pain signals. Massage therapy of the soft tissues, helps people to relax relieving stress and pain.
