TIA INCIDENCE & RISK
(e.g., High Blood Pressure, Diabetes, Smoking, Age)

A Transient Ischemic Attack (TIA), is a temporary blockage of blood flow to a part of the brain, the spinal cord or the retina, located in the back of the eye. It is also known as a ministroke. It can serve as a warning sign of a future stroke and a chance to prevent it. TIA symptoms usually last for a few minutes up to an hour, and doesn't cause long term damage. Rarely, symptoms may last more than 24 hours. According to researchers, about 1 in 3 people who had a TIA will eventually have a stroke, within a year after the TIA. Depending on the cause of a TIA, you may need medication to prevent blood clots. Also you may need a procedure to remove fatty deposits, known as plaque from arteries that block blood supply to the brain.

GOOD TO KNOW: TIA symptoms stops on its own. But, stroke symptoms doesn't stop on its own. It require treatments to control symptoms. On the first sign of a TIA, call 911 immediately. Don't wait to see if symptoms will go away. Call even if symptoms get better after a few minutes. Keep in mind * a TIA happens for a preventable reason.

SYMPTOMS: Sudden partial loss of one or more senses – vision, hearing, smell, taste and touch. A possible memory loss, confusion, personality changes, slurred speech, problems understanding others, face and arms drooping, loss of balance, mobility paralysis on one side of the body. RISK FACTORS: High blood pressure, the number one risk factor. Type 2 diabetes, smoking, irregular heart beats, high cholesterol, alcohol, obesity and non medical drug use. Age– older adults blood vessels become less flexible and narrow, decreasing normal blood flow.

REMEMBER: If you experience TIA symptoms that last for several minutes, don't ignore them. They are still a sign that you need medical attention right away. Keep your doctor informed of all your health status.
