Understanding Daily Nutritional Requirements (Part 2)

Part 2 is a continuation of daily nutritional requirements, for daily living. Your understanding will help keep your body functioning correctly. There by decreasing frequent doctor's visits, preventing possible hospitalizations and decreasing prescribed medications. Let's focus our attention on Zinc. A well needed mineral that preform as an antioxidant, fighting off bacteria, viruses and fungus. Zinc helps with wound healing, aid with the senses of smell and taste. Also helps to prevent cellular damage by reducing the risk of chronic diseases such as heart disease and cancer. Zinc is very important for infant and children growth and development. It also make the material called DNA. The common dietary sources are meat, seafood, legumes, nuts and cereals with other added nutrients. However, frequent decrease in daily zinc, will lead to weakened immune system, hair loss, diarrhea and delayed wound healing. Here is a suggestion for a simple quick breakfast: Scrambled eggs with spinach, feta cheese and toast.

Iron is a mineral that helps make hemoglobin and gives blood cells it's red color. Iron helps maintain healthy blood for transporting oxygenated blood from the lungs to all parts of the body. Also iron is responsible for healthy brain development in children, adding to the list, the production and function of hormones. Iron is mainly found in meat, poultry and seafood. But, iron is also found in plants, leafy green vegetables, whole grains, nuts and legumes. GOOD TO KNOW: Women requires more iron intake than men, due to to blood loss during menstruation. However, the rapid growth of the fetus, requires extra blood circulation during pregnancy, is another reason for increase iron intake. Here is another meal to try, Honey glazed baked children with potatoes and carrots casserole and a tossed green salad. Eating correctly is a big help in maintaining a healthy life style.
