Congestive heart failure (CHF) is a health problem, where the heart can't meet the body's demand for normal blood supply. Although, the heart is still working continuously, it is the hardest working organ in the body. Let's get a better understanding of what's going on inside the heart. There are certain risk factors that interfere with heart arteries blood distribution. Such as, blockage or narrowing of the heart arteries, will reduce blood flow to the heart muscle, affecting it's ability to pump effectively. Chronic high blood pressure forces the heart to work harder, leading to heart weakness and poor pumping ability. Other risk factors includes diabetes, obesity, smoking, prolong decrease activity and family history. The term congestive refers to fluid build up or swelling in certain parts of the body, mainly the lungs, feet and legs.

GOOD TO KNOW: CHF is life threatening, if left untreated. This health problem is determined by which side of the heart is affected and the causes. The heart is divided into two sides (left and right). The bottom left chamber of the heart is the main source for pumping blood to all parts of the body. It is larger and more muscular. The heart has four valves, that controls blood movements inside the heart. When the bottom valve opens for receiving blood, the top valve closes. By doing this, the heart valves make sure blood move in the right direction, preventing back flow of blood from the receiving chamber. SYMPTOMS: Includes, difficult breathing that can occur when walking, sitting or lying down at rest, bending over and doing the slightest activity, weakness, persistent coughing due to fluid in the lungs, irregular heart beats and frequent urination from excess body fluids. When symptoms occur, immediately notify your doctor.
